The Clan Murray. A family of the first rank in Scottish history. They are said to have come originally from Morayshire about the 12th century, their territory being situated in the Perthshire Highlands. Their head is the Duke of Atholl, a name of constant occurrence in national affairs, and quite a number of peers and baronets are descended from the family, including the Earl of Dunmore, an important supporter of the Stuart cause at the 1688 revolution, and the Earl of Mansfield, a famous statesman, buried in Westminster Abbey in 1793. At one time the family had the sovereignty of the Isle of Man, which was afterward sold to the Government. The badge is "Juniper."
